Scarcely had suthestic inteligence reached logland, that Nicholas was sectionally indisposed, structs, then a second dispatch announced that he was structs. when a second dispatch announced that he was dead. The first notification was telegraphed from Berlin by Lord John Russell, and stated that the Emperor had been suddenly attacked by a fit, of an apoplectic nature; that he had been given over by his physicians, and had calmly taken leave of his family, in view of his approaching end. Three hours elerward, dispatches reached Paris, stating that at room of the same day, the Czar Nicholas expirel—as before mending the control of the same day.

Lords Clarendon and Polmerston informed Parliamen, of the event; and by that dignified body the intelligence was received with due so emnity. At several of the English theaters, the maragers came before the curtain and problem ed that Nicholas was dead—an an ouncemen which was received in most instances with turnituous cheering! The ucws spread like wild-fire. Greater joy could not have been exhibited had Sevastopol fallen. Some of "the people" expressed much disappointment that the a lties did not ring the church bella!
